

Hafez: The Long Poems

Horse

The rose opens crimson
For the drunken nightingale.
Happy news, you revelling Sufis,
For the rock of your resolve is
Shattered by the crystal chalice.

Bring wine to the throne of Heaven,
For when the time of parting comes
From this tavern of two doors,
Sentry or sultan, wise man or fool,
Lofty or low through worldly gain,
All must pass through.

Even Assef's pomp and splendour,
The horse of the winds,
And the language of birds
Are lost with the wind, a worthless void.

So follow the path not the plumage
For powerful arrows soar a while
And then descend to dust.

Our time of joy comes tied to care,
For life was bound to loss at time's dawn.
Quit the struggle with being and non-being
And love life now,
For oblivion completes all design.

O Hafez, rejoicing in the beauty of your pen,
We pass your precious words from heart to heart!
